Across the globe, a quiet but historic exercise is underway--one that reveals both humanity's remarkable ingenuity and its deep unease about what might come from the heavens. Space agencies from more than 23 nations, led by NASA and the European Space Agency, have launched the largest planetary defense drill in history. It will run through January 2026, using the harmless passage of an unusual visitor--interstellar object 3I/ATLAS--as a full-scale rehearsal for a future threat that may not be harmless at all.

This is not science fiction. It is preparation.

3I/ATLAS, the third interstellar object ever observed passing through our solar system, is expected to make its closest approach to Earth--about 170 million miles--on Friday, Dec. 19. There is no risk of collision. Officials have been clear about that. Yet the interest surrounding this Manhattan-sized comet has been intense, spawning everything from serious scientific analysis to breathless UFO speculation across mainstream media. Strip away the noise, and what remains is telling: the world's leading space agencies are using this moment to train for a scenario where an object is on a collision course with Earth.

Doctor's 5 words explained my weight gain: You might have fatty liver.

That alone should give us pause.

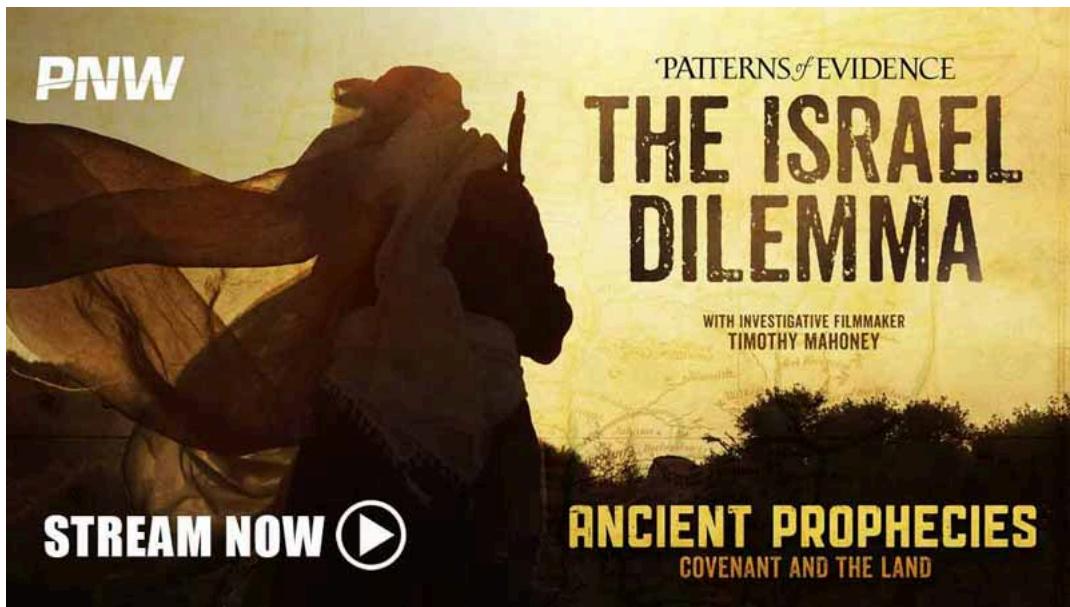

The objective of the drill is straightforward and sobering--to learn how to detect, track, communicate about, and potentially respond to high-velocity near-Earth objects. Interstellar objects like 3I/ATLAS travel far faster than typical asteroids bound to our solar system. Their moving through a vast and unpredictable universe.

And here is where science and Scripture begin an unavoidable conversation.

The Bible speaks plainly about events yet to come--events involving the heavens themselves. In the Book of Revelation, the Apostle John describes a future time when a "great mountain burning with fire was thrown into the sea," devastating marine life and commerce (Revelation 8:8). He also writes of a star called Wormwood falling to Earth, poisoning a third of the world's fresh waters and causing mass death (Revelation 8:10-11).

These are not poetic flourishes about personal hardship. They are descriptions of planetary-scale catastrophe.

From a modern scientific perspective, the effects described in Revelation are strikingly consistent with what astrophysicists say would happen if a large comet or asteroid struck Earth. An ocean impact could generate mega-tsunamis, wipe out coastal regions, disrupt global trade, and devastate marine ecosystems. An impact on land--or an airburst--could inject dust and toxins into the atmosphere, contaminate water sources, trigger global cooling, and collapse food supplies. Science confirms what Scripture has long foretold: such an event would be civilization-altering.

Yet the Bible goes further. It places these cosmic judgments within a specific timeline--the Tribulation period. According to Scripture, this seven-year period begins with the confirming of a global peace agreement, often referred to as a covenant or treaty (Daniel 9:27). Only after that point do the seals, trumpets, and bowls of judgment unfold.

This matters.

3I/ATLAS is not Wormwood. It is not the burning mountain of Revelation. But its arrival--and the global response to it--serves as a reminder. The world is preparing for impacts from the sky, even as it largely ignores the warnings written long ago about what those impacts ultimately mean.

The Bible does not tell us to fear the heavens. It tells us to discern the times.

As nations rehearse for a day when an object might threaten Earth, believers are reminded of a greater truth: history is not drifting aimlessly through space. It is moving on a collision course with prophecy. And when that moment arrives, it will not be stopped by drills, defenses, or technology--but fulfilled exactly as written.
