ARTICLE

Why Western Jews Are Coming Home To Israel

For generations, the West was supposed to be the safe place.

Europe and North America were where Jewish families rebuilt after the Holocaust, where they found opportunity, legal protection, religious freedom, and a sense that the horrors of the past would never again be tolerated. Britain, Canada, France, Australia, and the United States were not perfect, but they were viewed as havens compared to the persecution Jews had known across much of history.

That assumption is now collapsing.

A striking new report from Israel's Aliyah and Integration Ministry shows that aliyah from Western nations is surging. In 2025, 22,522 new immigrants arrived in Israel. But the most important part of the story is where they came from: immigration from the United States, France, the United Kingdom, and Canada rose by 25 percent, accounting for 38 percent of all new arrivals, compared with 21 percent the year before.

That is not just a demographic statistic. It is a spiritual and civilizational warning.

Why would Jews leave London, Toronto, Paris, New York, or Montreal for a country surrounded by enemies, targeted by Iranian missiles, threatened by Hezbollah rockets, and still recovering from the Hamas massacre of October 7? The answer is painful but obvious: many Jews no longer believe the West will protect them.

In Britain, the Community Security Trust recorded 3,700 antisemitic incidents in 2025 — the second-highest annual total it has ever documented. That followed 4,298 incidents in 2023 and 3,556 in 2024, showing that the explosion of anti-Jewish hatred after October 7 did not simply disappear.

Canada tells a similar story. B'nai Brith Canada reported 6,800 antisemitic incidents in 2025, warning that antisemitism has become “normalized” and should be treated as a national crisis. Canada’s own government has acknowledged that hate crimes against Jewish people rose 71 percent between 2022 and 2023.

In the United States, the Anti-Defamation League said 2025 was the third-highest year for antisemitic incidents since it began tracking them in 1979.

The pattern is unmistakable. The synagogue needs more security. The Jewish school needs more guards. The student wearing a Star of David wonders whether it is worth the risk. The Israeli flag is treated as provocation. Anti-Zionism becomes the socially acceptable mask for something much older and uglier.

And so the great irony emerges: Israel, though under constant threat, increasingly feels safer than the West.

That does not mean Israel is physically safer in every immediate sense. Israelis live with sirens, shelters, terror alerts, and war. But safety is not only the absence of danger. Safety is also the knowledge that your nation will fight for you, that your police and military are not embarrassed by your existence, that your children do not have to apologize for being Jewish, and that Jewish history is not treated as a political inconvenience.

For many Jews, aliyah is not only escape. It is return.

This is what secular analysts often miss. Jews are not merely moving from one country to another. They are returning to the land at the center of their history, prayers, identity, and covenant. Every Passover ended with the longing, “Next year in Jerusalem.” Every exile carried within it the hope of restoration.

For Bible-believing Christians, this moment is impossible to ignore. The regathering of the Jewish people to the land of Israel is one of the great prophetic themes of Scripture. Ezekiel saw a people brought back from the nations. Jeremiah spoke of Israel being gathered from the north country and from all the lands where they had been scattered. The modern return of the Jewish people does not remove the dangers ahead, but it reminds us that history is not random.

The nations may rage. Antisemitism may rise. Iran may threaten. Hamas and Hezbollah may attack. Western elites may lecture Israel while failing to protect their own Jewish citizens.

But still, the Jewish people are coming home.

That is the story behind the numbers. It is not merely immigration. It is a warning to the West, a testimony to Jewish resilience, and a reminder that the God of Israel has not forgotten His promises.
