There are survey results that make you pause. Then there are survey results that leave you wondering whether entire generations have sat in church buildings without ever hearing the basic truths of the Christian faith.

A newly released State of Theology survey from Ligonier Ministries Canada and Lifeway Research falls firmly into the second category.

The findings are nothing short of shocking.

What makes them even more alarming is that these are not the beliefs of the general Canadian public. These are the beliefs of people classified as evangelicals--the very segment of Christianity that has historically been known for taking the Bible seriously, emphasizing personal salvation through Jesus Christ, and defending core Christian doctrine.

If these are the beliefs of evangelicals, one can only imagine what similar polling might reveal among Canada's increasingly liberal mainline denominations.

The survey found that 73 percent of Canadian evangelicals agreed with the statement that "Everyone is born innocent in the eyes of God." Another 60 percent agreed that "Everyone sins a little, but most people are good by nature."

Those answers directly contradict one of the most foundational teachings of Christianity.

If people are born innocent and are mostly good by nature, then why did Jesus have to die?

That is not a minor theological disagreement. It strikes at the very heart of the Gospel message.

Yet the surprises do not stop there.

Perhaps one of the most astonishing findings in the survey is that 66 percent of Canadian evangelicals agreed with the statement that "The Holy Spirit is a force but is not a personal being."

This is remarkable because 93 percent of the same respondents affirmed belief in the Trinity.

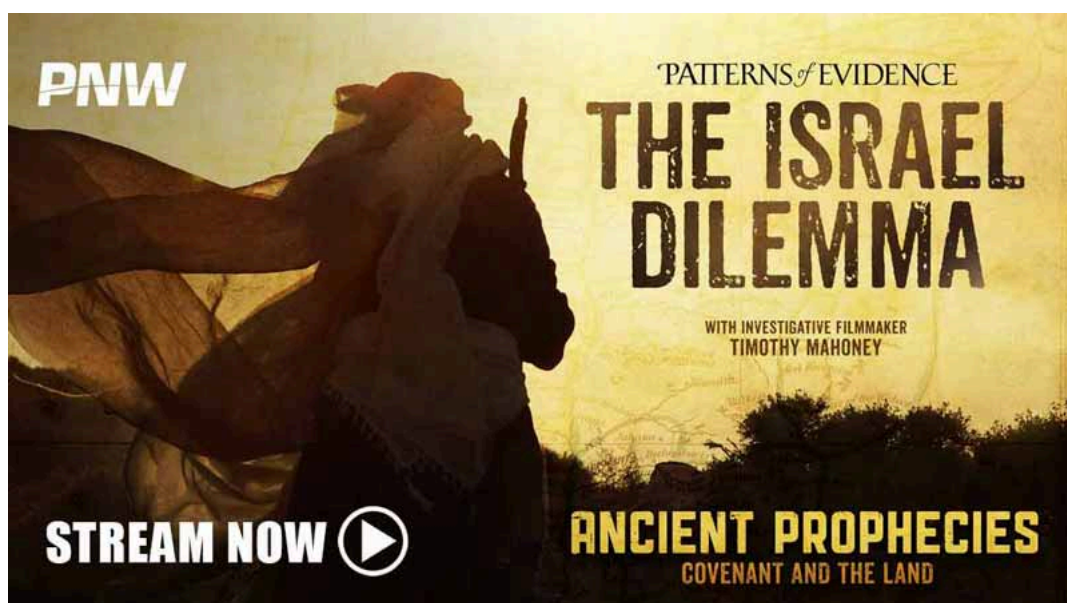

How can both statements be true?

The doctrine of the Trinity teaches that God exists eternally as Father, Son, and Holy Spirit--three distinct persons sharing one divine essence. To deny the personhood of the Holy Spirit is to deny a central component of the Trinity itself.

It would be similar to claiming belief in a triangle while insisting one of its sides does not exist.

The survey appears to reveal what the late theologian R.C. Sproul often called "happy inconsistencies"--people affirming Christian labels while simultaneously holding beliefs that undermine those very labels.

But even that explanation may not fully account for what these numbers reveal.

Consider another statistic.

Re:

The contradiction is staggering.

Christianity without the deity of Christ is not Christianity at all.

The survey also found that 28 percent of Canadian evangelicals believe the Bible contains helpful myths but is not literally true.

How can Scripture be the highest authority in someone's life if it is viewed primarily as mythology?

The deeper issue revealed by this survey may be the growing disconnect between Christian identity and Christian understanding.

The result is a Christianity that often retains Christian vocabulary while losing Christian content.

People still use words like salvation, grace, faith, and Jesus. But many no longer understand what those words actually mean.

The solution is not despair but discipleship.

It needs a renewed commitment to teaching the Word of God clearly, faithfully, and unapologetically.

A nation cannot preserve biblical Christianity if it no longer understands what biblical Christianity teaches.

The numbers in this survey are not merely statistics. They are a spiritual alarm bell ringing across the Canadian Church.

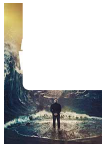

And it is getting harder to ignore.
